Toni,

Have terrable news!!!!

Our genealogy society keeps its books in the genealogy section of the local library. I had donated my Felder book to our genealogy society so I went to the library today to check your questions.

All after the breakdown of Henry's son Peter in missing from the book. Strange that all letters and notes in the back of the book are intact.??????

So, I went to my Hartzog files as a backup for info. Found the following:

Female Rev War Patriot: Hartzog, Catherine Schnell # 399409
m George Hartzog 1765 Orangeburg, SC.
issue: 1. John, b 16 May 1766 m Ann Margaret Felder
2. Daniel b 1774 m Susannah Zorn
3. Tobias b 1775
4. George m Rachel Felder
5. Wyatt b 1780
6. Catherine

That should put it to rest.

Regards,

Jim

To Gene Jeffries,

Had an research happening today which might be of interest to you.

I received a mailing today with family sheets from a Mrs Ada Hartzog of AL. She enclosed a note thanking me for my research on Daniel Steinwender and mentioned the name of a fellow researcher of mine who gave her info on Daniel and listed my name and address as the primary researcher.

I immediately called my fellow researcher and asked her how Mrs Hartzog fit into the Steinwender/Stivender line. Found that her line married into my Creel line in Barbour Co, AL. in the 1800's.

That settled I asked her about Mrs Hartzog. She informed me that the lady is in her 80's and is sharp as a tack. And then the great bit. She said that Mrs Hartzog is a member of a Revolutionary War society by virtue of actions of a female member of the Hartzog family.

Do you know of this female Hartzog patriot?

Now I will not send out Mrs Hartzog's papers to the newsgroup but I will list her address in case any of our Hartzog researchers would like to contact her.

Jim,

I believe Will contributed great info about the change in Sally name. Of course A.S. Salley sorta put his own spelling in the History index. The Giessendanner translation was one way and he indexed his way. The original passenger list says Zalley (I think)

Also, on the Hartzog hero. I believe I have seen the infor about the lady somewhere. I do not have in my files. Only Emily Geiger from Saxe Gotha and her heroic run. That tale was disputed by A.S. Salley and others.

Kathy, the Way manuscript would be very much appreciate. It will be placed in the Salley Archives, someday.

Jim Steinwinder-

I can't believe all of the good info you have put on the list in the last couple of days about the Salleys and now the Hartzogs. My g.g. grandmother was Anne Catherine Hartzog (b.2/12/1800-d.5/17/1883). Earlier I had some correspondence with the husband of a member of that family that I think has an extensive database. I don't know how much is on his line and how much is on hers but each name that he sent me has a number next to it and I remember seeing some numbers as high as 56,000. He is on Prodigy but says he only checks his mail every couple of weeks so I have been corresponding via regular mail. I've looked briefly tonight and haven't found his address as yet but will try to dig it out and send it to you. Earliest Hartzog that I have is Hans Henrich Hartzog (b. bef. 1695- d.10/4/1744). He married Katharina Kreyenbuhl (b.abt 1686-d.2/28/1730) and had son Bernard Hartzog (b. abt 1712-m. abt.1733- d.aft. 1760) that married Maria Saloma Meyer. Thanks for all the info. My information also indicates that the Hartzogs were from Sandhausen, Germany.

4 GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT

The community's first settler was John Hearn, who as early as 1732 was living just below where Orangeburg now stands. Three shiploads of German and Swiss immigrants settled in Orangeburgh Township between 1735 and 1737. From Switzerland came Peter Hugg; Anna, wife of Peter Roth; John Ulrich Giessendanner and his wife; John, Jr., and Jacob Giessendanner; Hans Henry Felder; Jacob Kuhnen and his wife; Ann, wife of Jacob Bossart; Melchior Ott; Anna Negely, widow; Magdalena, wife of Hans Indorff; Martin Kooner; Peter Moorer; Zibila Wolf (Grisons); John Friday; John Dietrick; Barbara Fund; Henry Wurtzer; Henry Horger; Jacob Stauber; Henry Hayne; and John Myers.²

From Germany came John George Barr, David Runtgenauer, Lewis Linder, and Elias Snell. From Holland came William Young. Other German names listed in the Giessendanner records include Stroman, Stoudenmire, Shaumlöffel, Holman, Hessy, Kuhn, Yutsey (Utsey), Yessenhut (Whisenhunt), Kreyter (Crider), Huber, Shuler, Rumph, Zimmerman, Rickenbacker, Hungerbuller (Hungerpiller), Wannamaker, Amaker, Keller, Inabinet, Zeigler, Leysaht, Kohler (Culler), Golson, Joyner, Ferstner, Tilly, Hartzog, Whetstone, Balziger, Brunzon, Stehely (Staley), Starekey (Sturkey), and others.³

Gideon Jennings, who came to Orangeburgh Township with his wife, Ursula, and two sons, Phillip and John, in 1736, was, according to Giessendanner, an "Italian Protestant," and in recording the death of Ursula, Giessendanner spoke of her as the "widow of Gideon Zanini, alias Jennings."⁴

Non-German family names found in the Giessendanner records include Barber, Barker, Bright, Brown, Bunch, Carter, Cheavy, Clements, Curtis, Fitzpatrick, Gardner, Gibson, Good, Gossling, Haig, Hickie, Hill, Holmes, Jones, Martin, McFashion, McGraw, Mercier, Murphy, Oliver, Partridge, Potts, Powell, Reece, Robinson, Robison, Smith, Sullivant, Trap, Tate, Weekly, Whiteford, and Wright.⁵

William Barrie, another early settler, was recorded by Giessendanner as having been a native of Scotland, and Seth Hatcher was said to have been a native of Virginia. The Larry or Larey family mentioned by Giessendanner was Irish. Col. John Chevillotte, a friend of Frederick the Great, was German-Swiss. Andrew Govan, Gavin Pou, and the Rows (Christopher, Henry, and Samuel) were Scots who settled in Orangeburgh Township about 1740.⁶

As a result of the British defeat of the French during the eighteenth-century struggle for empire known in America as the French and Indian

The village of Orangeburgh grew, or at least stayed on the map, for several reasons. It was a trading center, first with Indians and later for an agricultural area. It was healthily situated on the hills east of the Edisto River. The native people, in the main, were hardy, frugal, and hard working. It was a legal and therefore administrative center, even before the Revolution, with a courthouse and a jail, with lawyers living in or about the village, and with the sheriff's office for the entire district. Middle men, of course, were required, together with doctors, pastors, school principals, and teachers. Three known schools or academies—Connor School, the Whilden School, and Poplar Springs Academy—were organized in or near the village before the Confederate War. In addition, the fashionable Orangeburgh Female College, founded by the Reverend I.S.K. Legare, was located in the village and drew patronage from all parts of the state. These factors contributed to the stability of this old settlement. And not to be overlooked was the railroad, which came to Orangeburgh in 1840.¹

Bordering a stream called Penn Branch in the southern section of Orangeburgh District was the settlement of Branchville. Its location was near the forks of an old Indian trail which branched at this junction to the west towards what was later called Hamburg and to the north towards the village of Orangeburgh. At the forks in the trail stood a large oak tree, which later became known as the "Branch Oak," marking the place where the settlement was made. Using this trail, traders would accumulate at this junction sufficient quantities of goods to be transported to Charleston.

Early settlers in the area, who came from England, Scotland, and Germany, received grants from the colonial governor, Lord Charles Greville Montagu, circa 1767. Among these settlers were the families of George Hartzog and his brother, Daniel Linder, Paul Johnson, John Robinson, George Summers, Andrew Frederick, Nathaniel Byrd, Jacob Cooner, William Burers, Thomas O. Edwards, Abraham Ott, James Berry, Richard Berry, Robert McAlhany, John Bruce, William Syfrett, Jacob Barr, David Rumph, William Radcliff, John Rutledge, William Northrup, Edward Weyman, the Dukes, Grimes, and others.

Many of these pioneers undoubtedly served during the American Revolution on the Patriot side, while others aided the Tories. One interesting account tells about Patriots George Hartzog and James B. Berry, who were pursued by local Tories and hid in the nearby Berry's Bay. Angered by the Tories' persecution of his family and friends, Hartzog attempted revenge. He was never heard from again. George Summers, who came to America circa 1769 and established himself near Branchville, was in Francis Marion's brigade and fell victim to the Tories in 1781.

During the initial settlement, wealthy Charlestonians interested in establishing trade connections followed the Indian trail to Branchville and acquired land. Among them was William Northrup, who built a winter home here before the Revolution. Northrup's home, which burned after the war, was the first painted dwelling in the community. Another painted residence in the area was said to have been built by John Rutledge, who was later governor of South Carolina.

Following the Revolution, stagecoach roads were established through Branchville. These roads generally followed the same Indian trails that the pioneers used from Charleston along the Edisto River to Branchville. Where the routes forked, one road followed the trails across the Edisto River and westward towards Edgefield, the other road followed the trails northward through Orangeburg. Along the forks of the road in the southwestern part of the town stood Jim Hiers's two-story dwelling which was used as a boarding house.

During 1785 a Frenchman named Philip Chartrand settled on Penn Branch and built an inn on the Old Stage Road near the landmark Branch Oak. This inn, later referred to as the Branch Eating House, became a very popular place where travelers were able to exchange their horses and have a fine meal. After Chartrand's death, the inn and dining room continued to be popular. In later years, the Branch Eating House was re-established in the town depot and the inn rebuilt in the forks of the stagecoach road.

A lumber business was also in operation in Branchville in 1785. Connected with this business was a sawmill located on an old mill pond on Penn Branch. Nearby was a road shown on an old land plat as the "road to haul lumber to Orangeburg." Some of the lumber was floated down Penn Branch to the Edisto River, then rafted to Charleston. This mill was later operated by Squire Fairey and is known today as Squire Fairey's Mill Pond.

Inhabitants of the area held religious services outside under the trees prior to the American Revolution. After the war, Nathaniel Byrd, George Hartzog, and Tobias Hartzog constructed a little log church referred to as the "Meeting House." On January 11, 1811, two and five-eighths acres for the church were sold for one dollar by George Hartzog to Slaves also were licensed by the Methodist church to preach. For example, on September 24, 1825, Tom (Hartzog), a man of color, applied for and obtained a renewal of his license. The following year, "Moses Zeigler, a Coloured Man [applied] for a renewal of his License to Exhort, Granted."

Agitation for abolition at the General Conferences of the Methodist Church caused deep anxiety among Southern Methodists and eventually led to the sectional division of the Methodist Church. In 1844 the Orangeburg Circuit favored division and formation of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The following resolution was adopted at the second Quarterly Conference for Orangeburg:

Whereas [at] the last session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church the delegates from all the annual conferences in the slave holding states did make a declaration to the effect that owing to the continued agitation on the subject of slavery and abolition in a portion of the church, the frequent action of the General Conference on that subject and especially the extra judicial proceedings against Bishop Andrews, which resulted in his being virtually suspended from his office as Bishop, they judged that the continuance of the jurisdiction of the General Conference as heretofore constituted over the southern conferences must greatly hinder the success of the ministers in these conferences; and whereas the General Conference in consideration thereof did provide fully and constitutionally for the establishment of a Southern General Conference to enable the annual conferences in the slave holding states should said annual conferences and the churches in their care deem it necessary, for the reasons above mentioned to form such a General Conference; and whereas it appears to us that however desirable it might be under other circumstances to have the whole church in all these United States and territories form but one General Conference, yet in the circumstances which exist it is not expedient, nor could be practicable without great embarrassment generally and in many parts a total rejection of our ministers.

Therefore, resolved by the members of the Quarterly Conference of Orangeburg Circuit representing, we believe, the views generally of the members of the church of this circuit, that we approve of the organization of a separate General Conference for the Southern and South-western states and recommend to the South Carolina annual conference to appoint delegates to hold with the then concurring annual conferences a general annual conference at the city of Louisville, Kentucky, on the 1st of May next to be empowered to act in all respect for the church in the slave holding states as the General Conference of the is an old Bible with the date of the church's organization, 1788, printed in gold letters on the cover.

The original church building, known as White Meeting House, was a small one-room building situated on four acres of land on a branch of Middle Penn waters of Four Holes. The church plus the land was deeded to the Methodist Church on October 1, 1790, by Daniel Syfrit. Some of the early trustees before 1821 were James Patterson, Sr., John Moorner, William Murphy, James Patterson, Henry Hutto, John Cagle, and Abraham Rush. In 1821 all of these trustees (except Rush) were succeeded by Martin Gramling, Christian Gramling, John Patterson, George Bowman, Richard Blacklidge, and Philip Aaron.

The Reverend Francis Asbury, the first American bishop, preached at White House Methodist Church at least twice, first in 1801 and again in 1803. On Thursday, December 24, 1801, he made the following entry in his journal:

The Four Holes is a name given to a river because there are four sinks or holes upon the banks: here at the White meeting house. I preached on 2 Peter iii, 18: "But grow in grace." . . . I lodged at Jacob Dantzler's.

Dantzler lived near White's Meeting House in the eastern part of what is now Orangeburg County.

On Monday, January 10, 1803, Asbury remarked: "We rode twelve miles to Dantzler's. On Tuesday I spoke at the White meeting house on 2 Cor. Vii, 1. We lodged at Mr. Winningham's."

The church was very small and could not hold the crowd that came to hear Bishop Asbury, so he preached in a nearby oak grove. A board on which he placed his Bible was driven into a small oak tree. Later, the tree was cut and the section scarred by the board was saved and made into a pulpit.

The original church building has been replaced twice. The third building, which still exists today, was built in 1850 on the same site as the original structure. It is one of the oldest church buildings in Orangeburg County.¹⁰

The Mother Church of Methodism in the Branchville area was Sardis Methodist Church. It had its beginnings in 1786, when Methodist missionaries preached for the first time at the Branch Meeting House, about one mile north of Branchville. Jacob Barr was converted and began to preach at the meeting house, along with Henry Willis. On January 13, 1811, the log church was moved two and one-half miles to the north side of town to a site sold for one dollar by George Hartzog. Trustees
